Table of Contents

Chapter One: Introduction
1.1 Youth Culture in South Africa ................................................................. 5
1.2 Youth Culture and Globalization .............................................................. 7
1.3 Advertising ................................................................................................. 8
1.4 Aim of the Study ....................................................................................... 11
1.5 Research Questions ................................................................................... 11
1.6 Overview of the Research Report ............................................................ 12

Chapter Two: Theoretical Framework and Literature Review
2.1 Critical Discourse Analysis ....................................................................... 14
2.1.1 Social semiotics .................................................................................. 15
2.1.2 Relevance of CDA in the present study .............................................. 16
2.2 Identity ...................................................................................................... 17
2.2.1 A historical overview of youth identities and youth culture in South Africa... 23
2.3 Advertising ............................................................................................... 23
2.3.1 The discourse of advertising ................................................................. 24
2.3.2 Audience studies and interpretation of adverts ..................................... 25
2.3.3 Identity in advertising: a review of related literature ............................ 26
2.4 Identity in language and literacy education ............................................. 28
2.5 Conclusion ............................................................................................... 32

Chapter Three: Research Methodology
3.1 Data Description ....................................................................................... 34
3.2 The Research Sites and Participants ....................................................... 36
3.3 Research Instruments .............................................................................. 40

(a) Social semiotics
(b) Survey questionnaires
(c) Focus groups
3.4 Ethical Considerations ............................................................................ 43
Chapter Four: A Social Semiotic Reading of the Advertisements

4.1 Narrative Vectors
4.2 Modality and Colour
4.3 Social Distance
4.4 Contact or Gaze
4.5 Power and Camera Angles
4.6 Composition
4.7 Text 1: Soviet
4.8 Text 2: Guess?
4.9 Text 3: Diesel
4.10 Text 4: Levi’s
4.11 Conclusion

Chapter Five: Youth Readings of the Print Advertisements

5.1 The Soviet Advertisement
5.2 The Guess Advertisement
5.3 The Diesel Advertisement
5.4 The Levi’s Advertisement
5.5 Is this Advertisement Targeted at Men?: ‘get (ting) the best fish’(Palesa)
5.6 Advertisements as a Reflection of Social Reality
5.7 Race, Social Class and Globalization - do White and Black Kids Dress Differently?
5.8 Identification with the Brand
5.9 ‘We [are] not all about sex’ (Bani)
5.10 Resistant Reading
5.11 Conclusion
Chapter Six: Conclusion

List of Appendices

1. Appendix A-Survey Questionnaire
2. Appendix B- Focus group Interview Questions
3. Appendix C- Diesel Profile
4. Appendix D-Guess Profile
5. Appendix E-Levi’s Profile
6. Appendix F-Soviet Advert
7. Appendix G-Guess Advert
8. Appendix H-Diesel Advert
9. Appendix I-Levi’s Advert